Environment professionals meet at Mungumby

June 2, 2017
COOKTOWN

Cook Shire Council hosted Australia's peak environmental health organisation for their annual conference last month.

Environmental Health Australia's (EHA) Northern Group Conference was attended by about 30 environmental health officers from around the region, including Cook Shire's Environmental Health team of Sheils Barra and Pamela Maher. "Participants really enjoyed the remote, pristine location of Mungumby Lodge, with no interruptions from mobile phone service," Ms Maher said. "It was a great conference, and many of the attendees said they would be visiting Cooktown again."

EHA is the premier environmental health professional organisation in Australia, which advocates environmental health issues and represents environmental health practitioners.
